VIU Masters Thesis Research- Exploring Park Crowding from the Perspective of People with Mobility-Related Disabilities.

I will share information about my upcoming masters thesis research. As a student in the Master of Arts in sustainable leisure management program at Vancouver Island University. It is my goal to ensure that popular parks (e.g., national or provincial parks) are accessible to people with a wide range of physical abilities. For that reason, I will discuss why park crowding needs to be explored from the perspective of people with disabilities. I will also share my need for participants in the upcoming months. I will then elaborate on how I plan to use the study findings to bring awareness to crowded park accessibility and educate local parks organizations. My contact information will be provided for follow up and questions.
